Title: Training on rational use of electricity in buildings for energy auditors

Date & location: 19 March 2009, Gdańsk
Organizer: BAPE

Number of Participants: 15

Short description:

The event was organized by BAPE as a training for energy auditors who want to obtain the skills in rational use of electricity in buildings, impact of electricity on environment, technical solutions decreasing electricity consumption in households and public buildings.

Background:

The issue of reducing energy consumption (including electricity) of a building is very significant and specialists who assess the overall energy consumption of a building need to be aware of the types of retrofitting activities which a building can undergo to meet present standard and the measures that can be taken by dwellers and managers of a building in order to use the energy in a rational and efficient way.

Aim & programme:

The aim of the event was to inform about investments which can be undertaken to improve the energy efficiency of buildings and flats and about rational behavior of building managers and dwellers.

Agenda of the training by Paweł Bućko, BAPE:

1. Impact of electricity production on environment in Poland
2. Calculation of electricity consumption in a building
3. Methods to reduce electricity consumption in households

Results, follow-up:

The participants discussed deeply the approach to rational use of electricity, electricity tariff system, feasibility of investments in new household equipment. It seems that electricity consumption issues became more important since the real implementation of energy certificates in Poland (since 1 January 2009, only).

Various printed materials were distributed, among others the brochure on saving electricity in households developed under the EL-EFF project.
